v1.0

Sex and War

The course examines the biological and social determinants of aggression, violence, and war. Some topics include gender biases in international relations theories, women in combat, homosexuals in the military, discourse, attitudes towards war, rape, and female and male roles in the conduct of war. The course also assesses the roles of women as leaders, actors, and objects of foreign policy.

Course Requirements

There are three course requirements:

1. Class participation (15%)
2. Weekly summaries of readings (35%); and
3. A term paper (50%).

Seminar participants will be required to turn in a one page summary of the week's readings at the beginning of each seminar.

I recognize that public speaking is not a requirement of good scholarship and good analysis, but the true strength of the seminar format is intense and directed discussion. Seminar participants are therefore expected to contribute arguments, criticism, and opinions to the discussion; engaging major themes of the course on an ongoing basis.

Finally, participants will be asked to write a fifteen-page term paper exploring one of the major themes of the course. Seminar participants should feel free to work together both to develop suitable paper topics and to critique each others' work, but these papers must in the end represent each individual participant's own work.
